Editorial policy

RBSO, a bi-annual journal, publishes scientifically relevant articles in the field of Occupational Health and Safety. Priority is given to original unpublished contributions. With multidisciplinary approach, the journal covers many OHS aspects within the various segments of economy in the formal and informal labor world such as the relationship between work and health; conceptual aspects and analyses of occupational injuries; hazard analyses, risk management, and OHS management systems; epidemiology, etiology of occupational illnesses; exposure to chemicals and toxicology; relationship between workers' health and environment; behavior at work and its physiological, psychological and social dimensions; mental health and work; muscle-skeletal problems, psychological disorders and their relationship to organizational aspects and to the restructuring of production; OHS professions and professional practice; health services organization and occupational safety at public and private companies; labor regulation and laws, workplace inspection; social, organizational and political aspects of occupational health and safety, among others.

The journal also aims at increasing technical-scientific debate among researchers, teachers, legislators and OHS professionals. To reach this aim it seeks to aggregate in each of its issues updated and diversified contents, bringing up, whenever it is convenient, contributions on specific themes.

Kinds of contribution

The journal focuses primarily on original research papers across its whole scope, but also welcomes review papers, short communications, essays, book reviews and letters.

For more details look for topic 'instruções aos autores' at the Portuguese version of this website.

Submission

Papers should be sent by e-mail to both addresses:

and rbso@fundacentro.gov.br
rbsofundacentro@gmail.com

Peer review

Submitted papers are first analyzed by one of the editors. If suitable, they go through peer review on a double blind confidential basis. According to that analyses editors decide on their publication. During this process, articles can be refused at any time.
